Takashi: Thank you (A) your presentation, James. It was so interesting!

James: Thank you, Takashi. X

Are you interested (B) a “cashless” society?

Takashi: Yes, I am. “Cash” means money such as coins or bills and “less” means “without something”. I know more and more people are using cards and smartphones to buy things.

James: Yes, that’s right. Thanks to such cards and smartphones, we don’t have to pull out money from our wallet anymore.

Hana: Y They are very useful. However, my grandmother is 77 and thinks it is too difficult for her to use IC cards and smartphones. At this point, I think a cashless society is not good for the elderly.

James: It is true they need support to use new technology, but it is safer than cash for them.

Takashi: Really? Z I think cash is much safer!

James: If elderly people keep much money in their homes, and take money with them for shopping, that money can be stolen by someone. But it is impossible to use stolen cards because we can cancel the cards soon and they cannot be used.

Hana: I didn’t know that. I want my grandparents to start using these useful tools. Of course, I will help them learn how to use new technology. By the way, is there anything else which has surprised you while in Japan?

James: Well, many things. Taking off shoes is the most shocking! When I went inside my host family’s house without taking my shoes off, my host mother said in a loud voice, “Stop!”. I was so surprised!

Takashi: There are a lot of customs which are surprising to you, but I want you to enjoy them in Japan.

James: Thank you, Takashi.

4 次の英文を読み、あとの問いに答えなさい。

When the Prince died, the people of the city were very sad. (①) they made a statue of the Prince and put it up on the hill near the city. The statue looked very happy, so the people called it the Happy Prince. His body (②) gold, his eyes were two bright sapphires*, and a large red ruby* shone* on his sword*. The statue stood alone and always looked out over the city.

There was a swallow* who loved a grass. He met the beautiful grass for the first time early in spring. “May I love you?” asked the swallow, and the grass bowed* to him. So everyday he flew round and round her. This lasted all through the summer, and when the autumn came, all of his friends went home. He began to feel lonely and wanted to go home, too. “Will you come away with me?” he said to the grass at last; but she (1)shook her head.

He was so shocked and said, “I will go back to my hometown. Good-bye!” and he flew away.

All day long he flew, and in the evening he arrived at the city. He looked around and saw the tall statue in the park. “I will stay there,” he said. He landed between the feet of the Happy Prince.

“I have a golden bedroom.” He thought as he looked around and prepared to go to sleep; but just when he was putting his head under his wing, large (2)drops of water fell on him. “What a strange thing!” he cried. “There is not a cloud in the sky, but it is raining.” Then another drop fell; he looked up.

The eyes of the Happy Prince were filled with tears, and tears were running down his golden cheeks. The little swallow felt so sorry for the statue.

“Who are you?” the swallow said.

“I am the Happy Prince.”

“A” asked the swallow.

“When I was alive,” answered the statue, “I did not know what tears were. I lived in a palace. In the daytime, I played with my friends in the garden and in the evening I danced in the Great Hall. Everything around me was so beautiful that I thought I was truly happy. I lived happily but I died. And after my death, people set me up here so high that I can see all the ugliness* and all the misery* of the city. Even though my heart is made of lead*, (3)I cannot help crying.” He continued in a low voice, “Far away on a little street, there is a small house. One of the windows is open, and through it, I can see a woman. Her face is thin and looks tired, and she has red hands which are all injured from the needlework* work. In a bed, her little boy is lying looking pale. He has a fever and is asking for oranges. Because his mother is very poor, she has only river water for him. Swallow, swallow, little swallow, will you bring her a ruby from my sword? Will you stay for one night and be my messenger*? The boy is so thirsty and the mother is so sad.”

“I don’t like boys,” answered the swallow. “Last summer, when I was at the river, there were two boys who always threw stones at me.”

(4)But the Happy Prince looked so sad that the little swallow felt sorry for him.

“It is very cold around here but I will stay with you for one night and be your messenger.” said the swallow.

“Thank you little swallow.” said the Prince.

The swallow picked up the great ruby from the Prince’s sword and flew away to the mother and boy’s house.

When he reached the house, the mother was fast asleep. He went in the house and put the great ruby on the table. Then he flew gently around the bed and fanned the boy’s head with his wings. “How cool I feel! I must be getting better.” said the boy and fell asleep.

The swallow flew back to the Happy Prince and told him the things which he did. “It’s strange,” said the swallow, “I feel warm now, although it is so cold out here.”

“That’s because you did a good thing.” the Prince said. The swallow and the Prince (③) felt happy. Everybody is happier when he or she has done a kindness.
